

UNION

I push my heart
through yours

to catch God;
to catch his whereabouts;

in moments
when our separation thins.

Moments when my émigré friend
cradles me in the kitchen;

her warm arms
stretched out across nations.

My dead father whispers words that don't sound

and I catch my belonging
in silver.